Orville William Bloethe
May 3, 1919 - Dec 3, 2016

Orville William Bloethe was born in his parent’s farmhouse in rural Victor in 1919. His father, William, died when Orville was 3, leaving his mother, Lena, to raise 3 young boys on her own during the Depression. Orville and his brothers learned at an early age to milk cows, plant corn with a horse-drawn plow, and harvest crops by hand. The family nearly lost the farm to “The Equitable Man,” but Lena chased him off. Orville proudly celebrated the 102nd year of having this Century Farm in the family at the Iowa State Fair in August.

Orville worked his way through the University of Iowa doing every odd job the employment office could find for him. He joined ROTC and graduated with a degree in accounting. Within weeks of graduation, he was called to active duty in the Army in June 1941. He served from before Pearl Harbor until after the Japanese surrendered, discharged as a Major after commanding a unit of 300 and earning 3 bronze stars. When he finally made it back to Iowa, he never seemed to miss sleeping in a slit trench while listening for the bombs, whistling on their way down. He was a proud member of the American Legion, marching with the veterans for over 70 years.

En route home and still in uniform, he convinced the registrar to let him enter the full class of the Iowa College of Law although classes had started a month earlier. He vidcantly caught up, graduating in August, 1947 with High Honors.

The summer before his law school graduation, Orville’s classmates, Carl Schneier, went with him to the state fair. Carl took Orville home afterwards. It was in the kitchen of that farmhouse that Orville first saw the town of his wife, Louisa. They corresponded faithfully, visited six times over the winter and were married on their seventh date; April 4, 1947.

After graduation, the couple moved to Victor, where Orville began practicing law.

For the next 67 years, Orville absolutely loved practicing law in his home town. He often said, “my clients are my best friends”—and he truly meant it. Raised on a farm himself, he particularly enjoyed working with farmers and their unique concerns. During the Farm Crisis when many family farms had to be sold to pay estate taxes, Orville and a handful of others helped develop the idea of “special use valuation”—valuing farm land at production value instead of fair market value. He testified before Congress which adopted “special use valuation.” This legislation saved countless family farms from being lost to pay estate taxes and continues to shelter these family farms today. Nothing gave him greater pleasure than saving the family farm.

He “tied circuit,” lecturing lawyers, accountants and farmers about 202A (the IRS section for special use valuation) for years. Orville served the legal community faithfully as his hometown clients. For decades, he worked tirelessly to annually publish the Iowa Tax Manual, the 4-inch thick “handbook” used by attorneys and accountants to prepare taxes. The Iowa State Bar Association named him an Honorary member in 1997. He was also a long-time member of the Board of Directors of the Iowa State Bar Foundation.

Orville loved his hometown of Victor. He was the city attorney for half a century and secretary of the school board for almost seven decades. He believed the school was the foundation of a community and supported the school financially, particularly the high school. He was a respected and loved civic leader.

Orville and Louisa were the largest ticket purchasers at the Outback for years when they took the entire high school to the annual performance. Whether it be the theater, the health center, the park or any other public place in town, Orville found a way to support each one.

The North Star of Orville’s life was unswervingly his wife Louisa. Theirs truly was a marriage made in heaven and cherished by others. Orville has two sons, Chris and Craig Bloethe; and two daughters and their husbands, Tammy and Denise O’Rourke and Cheryl Bloethe Linder and Doug Linder. Orville also has seven grandchildren: Kelly, Liza, O’Rourke, Kelly, Katelyn, Darcy Haiman, Codie, Joel, Chase, Bloethe, and Addi and Axel Linder and Davis and Kaitlin Linder. Cordelia Grasmeck, Hannah Haiman, and Karen Hansen. Orville has two sisters, Esther Mielke and Thelma Gortenich Tisch; he was preceded in death by his wife of nearly 62 years, Louisa, on March 14, 2009, their parents, William Bloethe and Lena Bloethe Furnari, his brothers William and Leonard Bloethe and half-brother Wayne Funk.

The family would like to extend a special thanks to Shantel Lindsay and her talented team of caregivers that made it possible for Dad to stay in his hilltop house surrounded by friends and family in the town that he dearly loved.

Orville would not want anyone to miss out on a charitable tax deduction so he would have requested no flowers but instead suggested donations to Iowa Public Television, 6450 Corporate Drive, PO Box 6450, Johnston, Iowa 50131-1138, which kept his 97 year-old mind young or the charity of your choice.

Services were Friday, Dec. 9, in Victor.
Orville William Bloethe, 97

Orville William Bloethe was born in his parent's farmhouse in rural Victor on May 3, 1919. His father, William, died when Orville was 3, leaving his mother, Lena, to raise the five Bloomer boys on her own during the Depression. Orville and his brothers learned at an early age to milk cows, plant corn with a horse-drawn plow, and harvest crops by hand. The family nearly lost the farm to "The Equitable Man," but Lena chased him off. Orville proudly celebrated the 102nd year of having this Century Farm in the family at the Iowa State Fair in August.

Orville worked his way through the University of Iowa by working every odd job the employment office could find for him. He joined ROTC, and graduated with a degree in accounting. Within weeks of graduation, he was called into active duty in the Army in June 1941. He served from Pearl Harbor until the end of the Japanese surrender, discharging as a major after commanding a unit of 350 soldiers earning 3 bronze stars. When he finally made it back to Iowa, he never needed to miss sleeping in a slit trench while listening for the bombs, whistling on their way down. He was a proud member of the American Legion, marching with the veterans for 70 years.

En route home and still in uniform, he convinced the registrar to let him enter the fall class of the Iowa College of Law although classes had started earlier. He evidently caught up, graduating in August, 1947 with High Honors.

The summer before his law school graduation, Orville's classmate, Carl Schmoo, went with him to the state fair. Carl took Orville to the fairgrounds afterwards. It was in the kitchen of that farmhouse that Orville first saw the love of his life, Lena. They corresponded faithfully, visited six times over the winter, and were married on their seventh date: April 4, 1947. After graduation, the couple moved to the Victor, where Orville began practicing law.

For the next 67 years, Orville absolutely loved practicing law in his home town. He often said, "my clients are my best friends," and he truly meant it. Raised on a farm himself, he particularly enjoyed working with farmers and their unique concerns. During the Farm Credit Crisis when many family farms had to be sold to pay estate taxes, Orville and a handful of others helped develop the idea of "special use valuation." He testified before Congress, which adopted "special use valuation." This legislation saved countless family farms from being lost to pay estate taxes and continued to shelter these family farms today. Nothing gave him greater pleasure than "saving the family farm." He rode circuit, lecturing lawyers, accountants and farmers about 2032A, the IRS section for special use valuation for years. Orville served the legal community as faithfully as his hometown clients. For decades, he worked tirelessly to annually publish the Iowa Bar Manual, the 4-inch thick "handbook" used by attorneys and accountants to prepare taxes. The Iowa State Bar Association named its annual tax school for him and awarded him its very first Award of Merit.

Orville loved his hometown of Victor. He was the city attorney for half a century and secretary of the school board for almost seven decades. He believed the school was the foundation of an agricultural and supported HLS with both his time and treasure. Orville and Lena were the largest ticket purchasers at the State Fair for many years when they took the entire HLS high school to an annual performance. Whether it is the library, the health center, the park or most any other public place in town, Orville found a way to support each one.

The North Star of Orville's life was unswervingly his wife, Lena. Theirs truly was a marriage made in heaven and cherished on earth. Orville has two sons, Chris, and Craig Bloethe, and two daughters and their husbands, Tamia and Dennis O'Rourke, and Cheryl Bloethe Linder, and Doug Linder. Orville also has seven grandchildren: Jamie O'Rourke, Kelly Grabendike, Darcy Huisman, Codie Hansen, Chase Bloethe and Ann and Karen Bloethe Linder and three great-grandchildren: Cordelia Grabendike, Hannah Huisman and Karson Hansen. Orville has two sisters, Esther Miceli and Thelma Goetttsch. He was preceded in death by his wife, Lena, of nearly 62 years, Loanna. On March 14, 2009, his parents, William Bloethe and Lena Bloethe Farnum, his brother William Leonard Bloethe and half-brother Wayne Farnum. The family would like to extend a special thanks to Shantel Lindsey and her tireless team of caregivers that made it possible for Dad to stay in his hilltop home surrounded by friends and family in the town that he dearly loved.

Orville would not want anyone to miss out on a charitable tax deduction so he would have requested no flowers but instead suggested donations to Iowa Public Television, 6450 Corporate Drive, PO Box 6450, Johnston, Iowa 50131, which kept him a 97-year-old mind and young or the charity of your choice.

A celebration of life service was held Friday, Dec. 9, 2016, at the Victor United Methodist Church with Pastor Jim Davis and Pastor Lloyd Brockmeyer officiating. Fred Stiefel was the organist and Margaret Zehr was the soloist. Memorial honors were provided by the Victor American Legion. Memories and condolences may be shared with his family on the Smith Funeral Home website at www.smithfh.com.