Funeral services were held yesterday afternoon from the Smith Funeral Home for Mrs. Ingaba Heisel, who died at her home here Tuesday as a result of a fall, with interment in Hazelwood Cemetery conducted by the Rev. Charles R. Rowe.

Mrs. Heisel, who will long be remembered here as a mother and homemaker was born in Fairfield, Iowa, on September 1, 1873, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dunkard Davisson of that city. She attended an academy at Pleasant Plain, Ia., and college at LeGrand, after which she taught for a number of years before being married on February 26, 1899 to J. B. Heisel.

Shortly after their marriage the young couple moved to Pweshiek county and began to farm near Grinnell, remaining there until 1920 when the family moved to Grinnell, where she lived until her death. Through all these years, moreover, she was an earnest and active member of the Methodist church, and the W. C. T. U., but was always most deeply interested in maintaining a pleasant home for her husband and son.

On Tuesday morning, during the absence of her husband, Mrs. Heisel prepared to do an errand in the cellar, and in some manner fell, striking her head on the stairs, and sustaining skull fractures from which she died immediately. Her body was discovered by her husband when he returned home at noon.

She is survived by her husband, J. B. Heisel, a son, Jay Heisel of Des Moines, and two grandchildren.

Pallbearers Thursday were C. A. Blair, George Ross, W. B. Hoyt, Dess Martin, Albert Hanson and George Hamlin. Among those attending the services from a distance in addition to her immediate relatives were Mrs. Burt Dickerson and Lloyd Dickerson, Mrs. John Keller and family, and Mrs. Edgar Snook and family of Fairfield, and Mr. and Mrs. Guy Davisson of Libertyville.
