Metzuma Palladium: Walter Niswander, a young man about thirty-five years of age, was killed by an east bound fast train on the Rock Island Tuesday morning. The accident happened about three miles east of Brooklyn.

Niswander was driving a Standard Oil tank wagon to Victor and was comfortably bundled up. It is thought he did not hear the train when the crossing was reached.

The train struck the wagon fairly and Niswander was thrown onto the engine, his skull being crushed. One man was killed; the other escaped injury.

The train was stopped and then run back to Brooklyn with the body of the dead man.

He leaves a wife and two children.
